After Closing Campuses, ITT Says It Will Cease Operations Entirely

ITT Educational Services Inc., which last week announced it would close all of its campuses following a new wave of federal scrutiny, will now cease operations. The company said in a federal filing on Wednesday that it would close, effective on Friday.

Last week's announcement disrupted the education of tens of thousands of ITT students, who can now either transfer to other institutions or apply to have their loan debt discharged by the U.S. Education Department. The company has said it was the department's decision to cut off its access to federal aid for new students that prompted it to shutter its campuses.
